STATEMENT #1

In keeping with our goal to provide easy-to-understand human rights education for adults and children, as aligned with the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in 2004 the Foundation launched a major international campaign to increase public awareness and use of this Declaration. The campaign features a powerful series of Public Service Announcements and a new, illustrated publication, Know Your Human Rights.

The new booklet is an adult version of the highly effective What are Human Rights? which has now been translated into 19 languages and contains the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in language that children understand.

In 2004 there was more Foundation activity abroad, as well as an increased concentration of human rights educational activities in the United States. These further strengthened the educational efforts that emanate from the Foundation's international headquarters in Los Angeles, through programs into countries worldwide. To reinforce this expansion, the Foundation secured larger facilities.

In 2004, Mary Shuttleworth, Director of Youth for Human Rights International (YHRI), an outreach project of the Foundation, and Taron Lexton, cinematographer, embarked on the 2004 World Educational Tour. The purpose of Youth for Human Rights Int'l is to teach youth around the world about human rights and inspire them to take action. They traveled 45,000 miles in a period of 36 days stopping in 13 different countries - Hong Kong, Taiwan, Malaysia, Thailand, India, Nepal, Zambia, South Africa, Ghana, Venezuela, Guyana and Mexico. The purpose was to increase the understanding of human rights among youth and to found new YHRI chapters. There were meetings with human rights officials, ministers of education, religious leaders, local and national media and most importantly children in schools, groups, orphanages, universities, etc. The tour generated a wave of renewed interest in human rights education for the young.

American Foundation member and human rights ultramarathoner John Radich continued his human rights work in Europe with marathoner, Daniel Fatoux, and with their team ran the 2004 Normandy Marathon. Their message: Peace Through Human Rights.

In June, the Foundation joined with the Human Rights Department of the Church of Scientology International in sponsoring a public forum in Los Angeles entitled Do Human Rights Have a Future? The discussion invited lively debate by the 200-strong audience of public officials, university students, interfaith representatives and social activists.

In October 2004, City of Los Angeles mayor, James Hahn, proclaimed the first annual Youth for Human Rights Day International in an event jointly organized by the Foundation, YHRI and the Church of Scientology International. More than 600 young pupils from nine schools attended the event on the steps of City Hall along with city officials, religious and human rights leaders and prominent Los Angeles area artists. The YHRI Youth Summit followed inside City Hall where students from eight schools held a forum on human rights issues and their solutions.

Six recent high school graduates and a senior who shared the goal to do something to help mankind organized a YHRI summit in August at the United Nations in New York.

Drawing 23 youth delegates from around the world to New York, the summit included a reception at the United Nations, a multi-faith service at the UN Church Center, the Summit itself at UNICEF House and the premier of the fabulous YHRI Music Video, United. Youth delegates came from Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Canada, China, Dominican Republic, France, Germany, Guyana, India, Israel, Mexico, Palestine, Russia, South Africa, South Korea, Sweden, Switzerland, Ukraine, United Kingdom and the USA. They were able to speak in an open forum that included ambassadors to the United Nations from many countries, and other high-ranking officials, political and religious leaders. The Deputy Director of the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, Mr Craig Mokhiber, gave a very forthright address, pointing out that the United Nations has not yet achieved its goal of international peace and that the UN wants to work with today's youth who are the future to create better conditions in the world.

"Making Human Rights a Fact" was the theme of a human rights public forum coordinated and conducted by the Foundation in New York City in 2004. Attendees found out about the Foundation's human rights campaigns and how one person CAN make a difference. They learned what can be done by each person to make human rights a fact, and received a kit with tools to do this.

Peace Festival 2004, held at the University of California-Los Angeles, was the setting for a presentation of the Peacemaker Award to the Foundation. The award was given for "Outstanding contributions to world peace, social responsibility and the evolution of the human spirit and for implementing a New Civilization." The Foundation also participated in a Human Rights panel at the Peace Festival, "Making Human Rights a Fact," which encouraged active participation in the promotion and defense of human rights around the world.

The Foundation inaugurated a series of Human Rights Ambassador Awards on December 10th at an event in Los Angeles to celebrate Human Rights Day. The awards were presented to Los Angeles City Councilman, Martin Ludlow, for his efforts to bring about greater human rights by promoting education and reducing crime. Another award went to Marisa Ugarte of the Bilateral Safety Corridor Coalition for bringing sanctuary to hundreds of young girls whose lives had dead-ended in illegal brothels in southern California after being smuggled into the US. And an award was given to Karen Hubbard, Founder and Director of "Bless the Children," an impressive international relief group that is based in Florida. Through the efforts of Ms Hubbard and her daughter, Rebecca, Bless the Children has in the last few years donated 200 sea containers of humanitarian aid valued at more than $65 million to needy children around the world.

A hip-hop music video called UNITED was produced and directed by 19-year-old Taron Lexton. Over 2,000 people volunteered their talent, time, space, equipment, financial and moral support to accomplish this production. United is quickly becoming a global grass-roots sensation. The video has been screened at numerous events and schools in numerous countries.

The first in a series of United Public Service Announcements (PSAs) were produced.

After the music video, UNITED, went up on the YHRI website, the number of visitors to the website increased dramatically reaching 13,950 in a single month.narrative 2004

The YHRI illustrated children's booklet, What are Human Rights? which simplifies the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, has now been published in 19 languages and tens of thousands of copies have been distributed to children in five continents.

There were Youth for Human Rights Int'l (YHRI) chapters established in 52 countries in 2004 and numerous Hollywood celebrities lent their support and national leaders advocated its programs. Its expansion is continuing, relying on volunteers, donations and collaborations with like-minded groups.
