Sister Saito of Japan is studying this summer at the Delphian School in Sheridan.

Japanese nun studies system

SHERIDAN - For Sister Saito, a Roman Catholic nun from Japan, her summer visit to the Delphian School has been more than just a trip half way around the world. The educator has been sent at the request of her school board to study the technology of education developed by L. Ron Hubbard and determine the feasibility of implementing the methods into one of Japan's largest school systems.

"This is the first time I have enjoyed studying so much," said Sister Saito. "I have been an educator for many years and if I had known this method before, my students would have had far less trouble in their studies. I feel that I can now help people who are running into barriers in their studies by being able to help them quickly locate the source of their difficulties. I have found that the methods also help develop more responsibility in the students by enabling them to increase their ability to think for themselves about the subject they are studying."

Sister Saito is of the Catechist of Mary, Virgin and Mother, a secular institution of Japan. She is one of several students and educators from Japan currently studying the Hubbard method and learning English as a second language at the Delphian summer program.

This is the second year the school has offered its program to Japanese students.

80 students from Japan at Delphian

Despite considerable fears of volcanic activity and ash because of news on Japanese television, a delegation of nearly 80 students and educators began arriving this week at the Delphian School's Summer Institute.

The groups will be studying English as a Second Language (ESL), L. Ron Hubbard's study methods and determining the feasibility of implementing the methods in Japanese combination they find very desirable," said Gary LaVoie, public affairs director at the school. "This year, however, tremendous fear was generated in Japan about the trip after the reports about Mount St. Helens and the airing of the Portland Rose Parade where the Japanese were shown spectators wearing surgical masks. LaVoie said that once contacted by the school the French educator Gouin teaching foreign languages quickly. The Delphian School is a primary through 12th grade day and boarding school.

The school bases its ESL program on the Gouin-Carr system of teaching a foreign language which was developed in Sheridan by faculty member Clark Carr, who utilized tests written during the 19th century by the French educator Gouin
